H. V. LUCAS, FORMER MILLIONAIRE, NOW IN THE STREET DEPARTMENT

Scion of Wealthy St. Louis Family Accepts a Position at $75 Per Month and Says That He Is Not Ashamed to Work—History of His Family Extends Back to the Middle Ages—Was a Rich Man a Quarter of a Century Ago.

By what seems to be an odd and total whim, Henry V. Lucas, former millionaire baseball manager, has accepted a position as a street cleaner in the city of St. Louis. The situation pays him $75 per month, and his duties are somewhat onerous. Twenty-five years ago, Henry V. Lucas was regarded as the Prince of the Moneybags of St. Louis. For many months, he was one of the leading young men of the city. Son of a millionaire father, whose family practically embraced the territory which is now the heart of St. Louis, from the river to Jefferson avenue, and from Market street to Morgan, Mr. Lucas was born with the proverbial gold spoon in his mouth.

Heir to $1,000,000 in his own right at 21, owner of a baseball club of 21 handsome, well-bred, blue-blooded, and of great personal magnetism, he was a man envied. Mr. Lucas retains his youthful ability and fine appearance. He has lost his money, but not his polished manner and distinguished personality. He never drank or dissipated, slightly gray, straight as an arrow, faultless in dress, in manner, no man could tell from outward view that he is not today a millionaire. Time if not fortune, has dealt gently with him.

The Lucas are of Norman origin. The name is one of great age. The name of Lucas appears in the English Domesday book, compiled about the year 1086, in the list of the barons of the kingdom, and in the pages of the chronicles of the Middle Ages. The name of Lucas is the founder of the American family. Jean Lucapier was King's attorney to the French monarch, Louis XV. His mother was a Miss Parole. Like his father, Jean Baptiste Lucas was a lawyer.

He became acquainted with Benjamin Franklin while the latter was representing the United States in France. He was one of the young Lucases to emigrate to Pennsylvania in 1764. He settled near Philadelphia. President Jefferson, who was an emissary to ascertain the feeling of the French and Spanish inhabitants of the territory of Louisiana, was a friend of the Lucas family. The Lucas family was a prominent one in the territory of Louisiana. The Lucas family was a prominent one in the territory of Louisiana.

Mr. Lucas was a member of Congress from Pennsylvania. In 1860 he moved his family to St. Louis, where President James Buchanan appointed him as a member of the St. Louis board of public works. He was a member of the St. Louis board of public works. He was a member of the St. Louis board of public works.

When he came to St. Louis, Mr. Lucas found himself master of a $1,000,000 fortune. He was a member of the St. Louis board of public works. He was a member of the St. Louis board of public works. He was a member of the St. Louis board of public works.

FUGGY MEN OF COUNTRY CLUB MAY PLAY ASSOCIATION GAME

Former Stars of Big College Teams Have Fallen in Love With Soccer Contests and May Join Amateur League.

Association football seems to be assuming a vast hold upon the affections of young athletes of St. Louis. Whether this sudden affection for soccer is due to the recent visit of the Pilgrim team from England, or to the warm regard in which the game is held in St. Louis, previous to the recent visit of the Pilgrim team from England, it has been the best of St. Louis. The game is displaying a young but most healthy and admirable growth. The most recent sign of this growth is the formation of a new association football club, the Fuggy Men of the Country Club.
